

The One-Link Shorts System

Turn one link into a finished, captioned short without re-recording a single take

01

Stop Blaming the Camera

If you re-record the same line fourteen times and still hate the result, the camera is not your problem. The loop around it is: write, perform, re-perform, then format captions for every platform. That loop is what makes creators quit, and it is the part you can hand to a system.

QUICK TIPS

- Track how long one short really takes you, including retakes and caption formatting. That number is what the system replaces.
- Keep face-to-camera videos as an option, not a requirement. Consistency beats presence.

02

Drop In One Link

The studio accepts three kinds of input: a YouTube video you want to repurpose, a website or article, or a raw idea typed straight into the box. Whatever you feed it, the system pulls out the core point and rewrites it as a hook-first short-form script.

QUICK TIPS

- YouTube videos are the strongest input. One good source can feed a short, a blog post, and a lead magnet.
- For raw ideas, one clear sentence beats a paragraph. Give the system the point, not the padding.

03

Approve the Script Before Anything Expensive Runs

The pipeline writes the script, then stops and waits for you. Nothing gets produced until you have read it and said yes. This matters because the text is nearly free to generate while the production stages that follow cost roughly sixty times more. Approving the cheap part first means a bad draft costs you a fraction of a cent instead of real money.

QUICK TIPS

- Read the hook out loud. If the first two lines would not stop your own scroll, regenerate before approving.
- Cut any claim you would not say to a client's face. You are still the author; the system is just the crew.

04

Ship the Finished Short Everywhere

After approval, the studio produces the completed video with captions formatted for every platform in the same run. The short arrives ready to post on TikTok, Instagram Reels, YouTube Shorts, and LinkedIn without any manual reformatting.

QUICK TIPS

- Post the same short across platforms on the same day. The per-platform captions do the localizing for you.
- Save every approved script. They become a swipe file of hooks that already worked in your voice.

05

Build the One-Link Weekly Routine

Three shorts a week is very reachable when each one costs a link and a thirty-second approval. Pick your sources at the start of the week, run them through the studio, and batch your approvals in one sitting. Posting stops being a mood-dependent event and becomes a queue you clear.

QUICK TIPS

- Monday: pick three source links. Tuesday: approve three scripts. The rest of the week: publish.
- If a short hits, feed the same source back in from a different angle instead of hunting for a new topic.

Ready to go deeper?

This playbook is the short version. Inside the hub you get the full build walkthroughs, the prompt library, and the systems I use to ship this in a weekend.

Join the Build →

<https://hub.digicuratoragency.com/join>